Diamond Spectacles.

THESE SPECTACLES are manufactured from "MINUTE CRYSTAL PEBBLES" melted together, and are called Diamond on account of their hardness and brilliancy. It is well known that spectacles cut from Brazilian or Scotch pebbles are very injurious to the eye, because of their polarizing light. Having been tested with the polariscope, the diamond lenses have been found to admit fifteen per cent. less heated rays than any other pebble. They are ground with great scientific accuracy, are free from chromatic aberrations, and produce a brightness and distinctness of vision not before attained in spectacles.

Manufactured by the Spencer Optical Manufacturing Company New York. For sale by responsible agents in every city in the Union. H. A. HEATH & CO., Jewelers and Opticians, are sole Agents for Newport, R. I.,—from whom they can only be obtained. No peddlers employed. Do not buy any unless you see the trade mark.

IMPORTANT

TO INVESTORS

AND HOLDERS OF

State, County, Municipal,

Railway Bonds.

The great financial difficulty is causing a constant inquiry for Quotations and values of Securities not actively dealt in at the New York Stock Exchange. To meet this growing demand we have increased our facilities, and with many years' experience, a large acquaintance and correspondence throughout the country, can give that prompt and careful attention so essential in these times.

Holders of Bonds on which payment of interest is temporarily suspended, who wish to sell or add to their investment, will do well to consult with us. It would be advantageous to parties desiring to dispose of their securities to leave a complete description, quantity and price with us, so that investors calling daily at our office may make their selections in this way, insuring a more ready sale. Quotations and information in all matters of business freely given.

We also buy and sell at the Stock Exchange, Railway Stocks, Government Securities, etc., on Commission, for Cash, or on time.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1874.

TWICE MARRIED.

When I married Eunice Morgan I was, in my own estimation and that of many of my friends a ruined man. I had money, talent and culture, yet a terrible sorrow which came to me five years before, and whose memory had never departed, had made of me a nerveless, purposeless misanthrope. Yielding to the solicitations of friends, who thought a fit companion might restore me to the world, I solicited the hand of Eunice Morgan, who had known me from early childhood, and she gave me not only herself, but restored to me my own old self, purified, elevated, and strengthened. With the tact, affection, and character of the ideal woman in whom we all believe, she made life sweeter to me than the lost life I had bemoaned; and the sacrifice of her noble self which she had made for me seemed to fill her own existence with constant joy.

A few years before, while I was returning from the Continental tour which followed my graduation, I met and worshiped Anita Lozatos, a beautiful Cuban. My position in society was unexceptional, I was rich, and I pressed my suit with all of the ardor of a warm young heart and a fluent tongue. So I was speedily accepted by Anita and her parents, and we were soon married. In one of the charming villages near New York I built for my bride an exquisite villa in a noble grove of old chestnut trees, and furnished it with everything which her desires and caprices suggested. I was still a student, and an ardent one, but there were few hours in the day in which I did not for a few moments drop my books and seek and adore my beautiful, my glorious wife.

Slowly I learned the sad fact that Anita's fondness for me was only a passionate, fitful outburst, instead of a constant affection. I had never in the cooler moments of my courtship expected her to sympathize with my studious tastes, but when I comprehended that even my companionship was distasteful to her, and that I received her smiles only in exchange for such pleasures as I purchased for her, I became a very unhappy man. Trying to gain her affection, if she were capable of bestowing such a sentiment, I abandoned my studies entirely. I devoted my entire time to the duty of pleasing my wife. I spent without stint the money which had been left me by a rich father, I filled the house with company, I purchased a city house in which we passed the winter, and did all that a devoted and anxious heart could do to win the love of the woman I held so dear.

And I imagined, poor fool, that I was succeeding. The painstaking and anxiety of several days devoted to procuring her some new pleasure were fully repaid by the parting of her ripe lips, the light darting into her glorious eyes, and the claspings of her beautiful arms, which always indicated my successes. The tiresomeness to me of a large party of people who could only dance, drink and eat was always relieved when, after the last guest had departed, Anita would draw me down to her and kiss me a dozen times, and tell me that I was a dear delightful old boy.

At the close of one of the most brilliant entertainments I had ever given I strolled restlessly through the drawing rooms, the verandas, and the conservatory, looking for my darling. She had been unusually beautiful throughout the evening, and when I had caught her eye it had been so full of feeling and tenderness that I had longed for the moment to arrive when we might be alone, and I might for the thousandth time renew my declarations of affection. She had gone suddenly to her rooms, the servants said, and had left word she would return in a moment.

I continued my aimless strolling, when, entering the library, I found on the open volume I had last been reading a slip of paper bearing a line in Anita's delicate handwriting. It read:

"I cannot love you, for you are too great for poor little me. I have found one I can love. God forgive me and bless you."

I fell, and knew no more until days afterward when I emerged from the delirium of a fever. Against my will I recovered, but my spirits, my high aims and purposes, it seemed I had lost forever. I attempted to recommence the long course of reading and study I had determined upon when I left college, but I found myself devoid of aim or energy.

For several years I led a desolate life, never hearing of Anita, but holding her constantly and tenderly in my heart in spite of her faithlessness. One day there appeared at my villa a rough looking foreigner, who said he was a sailor, and had been handsomely paid to bring me tidings of the death of my wife, who had been washed overboard from the deck of a vessel in the Mediterranean. He could tell me nothing more about her, except that she was travelling alone at the time of the accident, and had left among her papers a note enclosing a large bank note to pay for intelligence being sent me in the event of her sudden death at any time.

I informed two or three faithful friends of the sad fate of my wife, and they, who had been unwearied in their endeavors to rally me, insisted that I ought to marry again. At first I utterly refused to listen to the suggestion, but so skillful and untiring were they that they finally prevailed upon me to re-enter society. Then, with an apology, I offered to Eunice Morgan the remains of my former self, and she accepted me as sweetly as if I had been in all of the cheerfulness of untroubled youth.

How she unmade and remade me I cannot tell, for I was scarcely conscious of what was taking place. But so fully did she sympathize with all of my old hopes and aspirations that I soon found myself at my studies with an energy and ability I had never before possessed. The constancy of her sense and sympathy was even exceeded by that of her affection, which seemed never to slumber for an instant. Finally, when, on my return from an enforced absence for a few days, Eunice from her couch sweetly handed to me a wee warm miniature of herself, my cup of joy seemed full to overflowing.

As Eunice recovered, she spent most of her time in the grove and garden which surrounded the house. These, to gratify Anita's tropical tastes, I had prepared without regard to expense, and, now that all of the shubbery had gained several years of growth, one could roam about for days and still find new and beautiful combinations and effects. There, whenever I wearied of my books for awhile, I sought my darlings, and always found in their society exactly the recreation I needed.

One evening as I wandered through the garden in hopes of suddenly surprising Eunice and her little namesake, I suddenly emerged from a group of shrubbery and beheld a scene that startled me. Eunice, who was to me the ideal of all that was pure and faithful and noble, sat in a rustic chair, and murmuring pasionately, was a slight, handsome foreigner, whose features were strange to me. Eunice, my trusted wife, seemed deeply affected—so much so that the cries of her little daughter, who had fallen to the ground a few steps away, were unheeded. My footsteps startled them, and the man, glanced hastily at me across his shoulder, sprang to his feet and bounded hastily away, while Eunice, still tearful, maintained a composure which astounded me, and gave me a searching, pitying, tender look which completely bewildered me. For a moment or two I was speechless, and then I asked:

"Who was that man, Eunice?"

"A poor beggar, Herbert," she replied.

"He was very finely dressed for a person in that profession," said I. The suspicion which for the time filled my mind probably betrayed itself in my tone, for Eunice arose, proud, handsome, and angry, and exclaimed:

"Herbert! do you doubt my word?"

Never, in her most tender moment, had I seen Eunice so perfect a picture of purity and nobility. My suspicions were disarmed in an instant, and, throwing my arms about her neck, I begged her pardon, and expressed my penitence in the fullest terms I could command, until with her own dear lips she stopped my utterance entirely.

From that day there commenced a series of charges in Eunice's manner, which by turns perplexed, embarrassed, grieved, and provoked me. At first I attributed her strange manner to my grievous blunder in momentarily distrusting her faith, so I was unceasing in apologies and in my endeavors to make atonement by showing even more affection than that which seemed already to occupy my entire thought and time. But when she admitted that my mistake had been a fully justifiable one, I became convinced that there was a different cause for her change of demeanor. Though more than ever devoted to my interests, hopes, and tastes, she seemed to shrink from the close and tender companionship which had previously existed between us.

Little by little she withdrew herself from me, until we were little more than polite acquaintances. Pretending that our little daughter might disturb my rest by her wakefulness, Eunice arranged for herself apartments near those which Anita had occupied. These latter had been locked immediately after Anita's departure, and had never been entered by any one. Then, though apparently in the best of health, Eunice complained of frequent indisposition during which attacks she had her meals sent to her room, and our housekeeper remarked casually, that my wife had an unusual appetite when sick.

Time after time I implored her to tell me the cause of her sadness and strangeness, but every time I alluded to the subject she would look so unutterably sad and weep so bitterly that out of regard for her I finally desisted entirely. She said that I had never made her unhappy—that my love for her had been greater than she had ever believed could be shown by man to woman, and that she had rather be my slave than the wife of any other man in the world. But when, moved by the passion of her words and looks, I begged her, for her love's sakes to tell me the cause of her sorrow, and put it in my power to remove it if possible, she would burst into tears— even my caresses seemed to be unendurable to her.

As for me, my own life became utterly miserable. The idea of a dreadful secret sorrow in the life of the woman I loved so dearly was insupportable, yet there was no honorable escape from it. Any privation from her society I would have cheerfully endured if I could have thereby restored to her the happiness she seemed to have lost entirely, but the thought that my suffering was fruitless of any good to her only added to my misery. I lost my spirits, my appetite, my interest in my studies, and finally my ability to sleep. Night after night I spent on the veranda, or gloomily strolling under the old chestnuts about the house, wondering, hoping, praying, cursing—sometimes almost determined to end Eunice's life and mine, and learn her secret after we were both rid of its blighting effects.

One dark windy night I was pacing the veranda, long after midnight, when I was startled by a bright light appearing in the room which had been Anita's chamber. I instantly determined that thieves, having heard the story which every gossip in the village knew, had selected this night in which to carry away some of the valuable contents of my poor erring wife's apartments. For years her memory had been to me a thing of the past, but now the idea that rude hands could touch anything once dear to the woman I had loved, roused me to the wildest fury. Hastily taking a revolver from my desk, and snatching from a case of curiosities a two-pointed Malay dagger, I softly ran through a passage which led to the room where the light was shining. I stopped at Eunice's room to warn her against unnecessary alarm, but to my surprise Eunice was not there. Could she be in Anita's chamber, I wondered? I crept along the passage, pausing at every step or two to listen. The door of the long-closed chamber stood ajar, and suddenly I heard sounds which seemed to stop my heart-beats. I heard the voice of Eunice and a voice which was hoarse, rapid, eager, and with a foreign accent.

In an instant I was almost mad with jealousy. The well-dressed foreign beggar—my wife's sorrow and her mysterious conduct—her withdrawal from my companionship and my chamber—her frequent indispositions—the bountiful meals consumed at such times—her aversion to my caresses—all that had happened since the day I had surprised my wife and the beggar, linked itself together in one strong chain of damning evidence against my wife. She had loved the foreigner—she had brought him into the house of the man he was wronging—she had secreted him in the rooms she knew were safe from intrusion—she had even fed him from her husband's table.

A terrible calm quickly succeeded my fury, but found me cruel, vengeful, merciless. I would quickly and surely slay them, and then, taking my little daughter, I would fly forever from the home which had so terribly disgraced me.

Hastily I threw open the door, but it turned noiselessly on its hinges without disturbing the occupants of the room, and revealed to me a scene which struck me dumb. On the pillow of the dainty couch of my lost wife lay the worn, wasted, unmistakable face of Anita Lozatos! By the bedside, clad in white, with her golden hair unbound, and rippling over her face and shoulders, stood Eunice. Her eyes were full of tears, while all the tenderness of pity, sorrow, and compassion heightened the beauty of her pure features into something almost angelic. One of her hands was tightly held by Anita; with the other she was pointing upward.

"Forgive me again" groaned Anita, hoarsely, "for the pain my presence has given you."

"Ask forgiveness of God," replied Eunice. "I have only done my duty."

"The years of pain I gave Herbert," continued Anita—"can he ever forgive ?"

"Ask God," said Eunice, still pointing upward.

"Ah, yes, my sister," said Anita, "But I am not a saint like you. God had all His angels to comfort Him when I sinned, but Herbert was alone with his sorrow. Do you think he will forgive my soul after it has left my body?"

"He will forgive you now," replied Eunice. "His is a noble soul, and he is—your husband. Let me bring him."

"Oh, do not! I dare not meet him! Before I could tell him all he would curse me!" cried Anita, shuddering and shutting her eyes as if to hide some dreadful sight.

"You do not know him," replied Eunice. "He is honor itself. Whatever is pitiful, honorable, manly, Christian, that is Herbert. He shall forgive you."

"He will!" I cried, advancing to the bedside. Eunice started; Anita, with a wild cry, hid her face in the pillow.

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1874.

THE DAY.

The Republican state convention meets at Providence tomorrow.

The Iowa legislature has adopted by a very large majority a law dividing all the railroads in the state into three classes and limiting their passenger tariffs to three, three and a half and four cents a mile, respectively. The freight tariff is regulated in the same way. Severe penalties for the violation of this law are imposed and a fund of $10,000 is set apart to be used in prosecuting railroads that make illegal charges.

We have already quoted the opinion of the Boston Advertiser that the Massachusetts ten hour law is not an unmixed blessing to the working people. The Pittsfield Eagle says that the manufacturers of Berkshire county are somewhat alarmed at the prospects. They have to compete with manufacturers in other states who are not subject to such a law as this, and to have six hours a week taken off the labor of each woman and child employed is a serious drawback, and may result in the discharge of the operatives or in the proportionate reduction of their wages. If either of these things should occur it is probable that the persons for whose benefit the law was passed will find themselves no better off than they were before.

THE COST OF SECESSION.

A writer in the last Edinburgh Review has undertaken to give, from official sources, the effect upon the South of the late war. The article is written in a temperate and impartial style and appears to be carefully written and reliable. We at the North have been so occupied by estimating our pecuniary loss and counting our vacant chairs that we have given little attention to the effects of the war on the defeated party and the reader of this article will be astonished at some of the figures presented.

Emancipation inflicted on the South a loss of about two billion dollars, or nearly equal to our national debt and more than double the indemnity exacted by Germany from France. As the population of the Southern states was but one sixth that of France the loss of the South by emancipation alone was a burden twelve fold greater than that imposed upon defeated France. Had the loss been equally divided among all Southerners, old and young, male and female, rich and poor, it would have averaged between $250 and $300 to each person. Of course this was utter ruin to all those whose property consisted mainly of slaves, but the large slave owners were generally large real estate owners, so that in the main, the loss fell upon those who were best able to bear it.

This loss, while falling severely on individual slave owners, is no real loss to the country because the labor of the colored people remains. But after deducting the value of the slaves and allowing for the premium on gold we find that that the real and personal property of the eleven Confederate States in 1860 was about $3,202,231,000 and in 1870, $2,369,896,580: showing a loss in the decade of considerable over eight hundred million dollars, or about twenty seven per cent. This is the actual destruction of property that once existed. The rate of increase of valuation all over the country, including the South, averaged one hundred per cent. If therefore, the South had increased its valuation, not as the North has, but as the whole country on an average has, its valuation would be nearly three times what it is today, and this does not take into account any effect the war may have had in retarding the increase of wealth at the North.

The value of farms in the South in 1870 was less than half their value in 1860, and even less than their value in 1850, and this in spite of the fact that between 1860 and 1870 2880 miles of railroad were built in this section of the country, and a railroad almost always greatly increases the value of adjoining farms. In spite of this immense depreciation local taxation has more than doubled since the war. By local taxation we mean state, county and town or city taxes, but not federal taxes.

Not as with the conqueror, so with the conquered;—her most terrible loss is not to be measured by dollars and cents. With a population of five and a half million the South sent into the field in four years a million soldiers. That is, for every eleven men, women and children, two men went into the army. It is estimated that the actual deaths in the Confederate armies amounted to 350,000; and this does not include the disabled by wounds or sickness. In spite of this awful waste of life the white population of the seceding states increased, in the decade under consideration, 7 per cent. The South has received almost no increase of population from foreign countries and but a small number have gone there from the North.

With regard to the colored people it is found that their numbers have increased but 9.21 per cent. The destitution and disease that followed emancipation and their flocking to the Union armies, and their own improvidence at the first dawn of freedom are among the causes that account for this slight increase. The author of the article before us finds, however, that the colored people are making good use of the opportunities of education afforded them and that they are rising to a higher state of civilization as is shown by the rapidly diminishing number of women who do men's work.

The movements of the colored population have falsified most of the predictions which were made at the close of the war. The freedmen have distributed themselves through the South very unequally and not at all according to the programme laid down for them. Their numbers have increased immensely in Texas, and more than nineteen per cent. in Georgia, but in Louisiana they have increased less than four per cent; in Alabama less than their average of 9.21 per cent; in Mississippi less than two, and in South Carolina less than one per cent. Unfortunately the colored people have been moving from the farming districts to the cities. During the decade we have been considering the colored population of Charleston increased fifty per cent., that of Washington doubled, and that of New Orleans trebled. Some very just considerations relative to the influence of the Ku Klux and the carpet-baggers in the South are offered in explanation of the depreciation of property and the movements of the freedmen.

One evening last week a man, with a bundle under his arm, at the Woonsocket station seeing the train leave for Providence, bethought himself that the road was clear and he would cross the railroad viaduct and bridge, contrary to the sign orders. He had lived there some years and knew all about the running of the trains—he thought.

When nearly half way over he suddenly saw the up train approaching him. It was dark; he had no time to look for a place of safety, and so dropping his bundle, he let himself down over the earth beneath, expecting he could hold on to the timber with his hands till the train had passed and then he would draw himself up, but his hold grew weaker and he was obliged to drop 14 or 15 feet. He thought he was much hurt, only his back felt the shock severely, but he does not care to try it again.

MAGAZINES.

Phrenological.

The Illustrated Annual of Phrenology and Physiognomy for 1874, contains eighty large octavo pages, with more than fifty engravings, representing heads, faces, mouths, noses, good and bad, with "signs of character," also, My Schoolmates, and What Became of Them; A Good Memory; "The Leak; or a Hole in a Pocket through Bad Habits;" and How to Save Money! One Thousand Boys Wanted; Bad Breath, Its Cause and Cure; A Fascinating Face: What the Savans are Doing for Mental Science, etc. Agents wanted. Newsmen have it. Sent prepaid, by first post, for 25 cents, by S. R. Wells, Publisher, 389 Broadway, New York.

Littell's Living Age.

The numbers of The Living Age for February 28 and March 7 have the following rich and varied contents:—Memoir and Letters of Sara Coleridge, Edinburgh Review; a second instalment of the Letters of Mrs. Browning, on Literary and General Topics, Contemporary Review; Spanish Life and Character in the Interior, During the Summer of 1873, part V, Macmillan's Magazine; Sully, Soldier and Statesman, New Quarterly Review; France, Italy and Germany, Saturday Review; How Far Have Our Working Classes Benefited by the Increase of Wealth, Economist; etc., etc., together with part third of the very remarkable story, "Far from the Madding Crowd;" the conclusion of a story by Anthony Trollope; a short story by the author of "Patty," and the usual amount of choice poetry and miscellany.

With fifty two such numbers, of sixty four large pages each, aggregating over 3000 pages a year, the subscription price ($7) is low, or still better for $10, any one of the American $4 magazines is sent with The Living Age for a year. Littell and Gay, Boston, Publishers.

Wood's Household Magazine.

The March number of Wood's Household Magazine is a capital one. It opens with an interesting story entitled, "The Gabling Hand," by Mrs. H. G. Rowe: following this Joseph Snider gives his "Experiences in the City," an article which for its simple truth the youth of the land should read to their profit; "My Prayer" is not a religious sketch as one would suppose from the title, but is a most touching story, told in the sincere manner and rough speech of a railroad hand. "The Weekly Diabolical," by Karl Kase, aims a sharp and timely blow at sensational literature. "The Kaiser Frederick" is one of Mary Hartwell's entertaining stories. In the installment of "Misery Jippens," H. V. Osborne raps the knuckles of the fashionable clergyman, and buries Penny Post from sight. There are several other articles of merit, and some choice poetry. The magazine contains six illustrations, including a fine design for a country school house. Terms only one dollar a year—with chromo Yosemite one dollar and a half. Subscriptions may begin with any number. Address, Wood's Household Magazine, Newburgh, N. Y.

The Edinburgh Review.

The Leonard Scott Publishing Co.'s reprint of the Edinburgh Review for January has just reached us. The following is a summary of the contents:

I. "Libraries, Ancient and Modern." A short account of the histories of ancient libraries, and of the nature and circumstances of book-collecting in early times, followed by a survey of the progress made within the past few years by the library of the British Museum and its rivals abroad an attractive article to bibliographers.

II. "Memoir and letters of Sara Coleridge." A thorough review of the work, interspersed with many quotations, illustrating the moral and intellectual characteristics of a highly gifted woman.

III. "The Diplomatic Service." Dwelling mainly on the difficulties with which the younger members of the service have to contend.

IV. "Autobiography of John Stuart Mill." The most interesting of the many reviews we have seen of this work, written by one who was personally acquainted with the author. It will be no fault of the periodical press if the public fails to form a correct estimate of this distinguished author.

V. "Ninth Census of the United States." Comments mainly on the Southern States and the effects produced by the war and emancipation.

VI. "Heer's Primeval Life in Switzerland." Describes the remains of animal and vegetable life that abound in its mountains, from base to the very summit.

VII. "Life and Correspondence of the First Earl of Minto." After a glimpse at the early records of the Elliot family, we have here a condensed narrative of the life of Sir Gilbert Elliot, now better known as the first Earl of Minto. Many interesting details are given connected with his career in Parliament during the anxious times of the American and French Revolutions. For many years Elliot was intrusted with various important foreign missions and embassies: and he was raised to the peerage with the title of Earl of Minto, as a reward for his services in Corsica. Eventually appointed governor-general of India, he won no mean place in history by his efficient administration of the government.

VIII. "Results of the Education Act."

IX. "The Doctrine of the Sacred Heart." Suggests that the style and metaphorical language of the worship of the Sacred Heart had possibly their origin in the mystical effusions of the famous Puritan divine, Thomas Goodwin; the Jesuits only giving "the additional body coloring, which Romanism imparts and admits, to the vigorous but less definite outlines traced by the Calvinist."

X. "Disraeli's Glasgow Speeches." A timely paper, considering the present state of parties in England.

THE SPARROW.

RECITED AT A RECENT CONCERT OF THE UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

I am only a little sparrow,
A bird of low degree,
My life is of little value,
But the dear Lord cares for me.

He gave me a coat of feathers,
It is very plain I know
With never a speck of crimson,
For it was not made for show.

But it keeps me warm in winter,
And it shields me from the rain
Were it bordered with gold or purple,
Perhaps it would make me vain.

I have no barn nor store house,
I neither sow nor reap,
God gives me a sparrow's portion,
But never a seed to keep.

If my meal is sometimes scanty,
Close picking makes it sweet,
I have always enough to feed me,
And—"life is more than meat."

I know there are many sparrows;
All over the world we are found,
But our Heavenly Father knoweth
When one of us falls to the ground;

Though small we are not forgotten,
Though weak we are never afraid,
For we know that the dear Lord keepeth
The life of the creatures he made.

I fly through the thickest forest,
I light on many a spray,
I have no chart nor compass
But I never lose my way.

And I fold my wings at twilight
Wherever I happen to be,
For the Father is always watching
That no harm shall come to me.

C. M. W.

IN 1792 TIMOTHY PICKERING was postmaster-general, at a salary of $2000, with a thousand dollar assistant and a clerk to match. He asked permission of Alexander Hamilton, secretary of the treasury, to hire two rooms, a cellar and a servant, for the department, at a cost to the Government not to exceed three hundred dollars. Hamilton thought the arrangement seemed consistent with the interests of the United States, though what that had to do with it would puzzle a modern statesman sorely.

The Source of Many Ills.

If all the ailments, bodily and mental, which torment the human family could be traced to their primary sources, it would probably be found that three-fourths of them originated in the failure of the stomach and the other organs by which the food is converted into nutriment and applied to the purposes of life, to perform the tasks allotted to them by nature, vigorously and regularly. This being the case the vast importance of a medicine which compels these organs to do their whole duty, thoroughly and efficiently, becomes at once apparent. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters may be truly characterized as a preparation of this kind, indeed as the only one which can be implicitly relied on as combining the properties of a stomachic, an alterative and an aperient in such proportions as to produce simultaneously the desired effect upon the disordered stomach, liver and intestines. This conclusion is warranted by the celebrity and certainty with which the Bitters afford relief in chronic cases of dyspepsia, torpidity of the liver and constipation. The false idea that these complaints and others that grow out of them, could be cured by fierce cathartics, has at last, it is hoped, been thoroughly exploded. The sick, during the last hundred years have swallowed thousands of tons of mercury, scammony, gamboge, croton oil, jalap, &c., and tons of thousands of graves have been prematurely filled thereby. But ever since the principles of renovation, as embodied in Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, was arrayed against the principle of prostration, as represented by mineral salivants and furious, purgatives, the latter has steadily and surely fallen into deserved contempt. The ordinary natural stimulation by which conceptors of depleting drenches hoped to give relief to their disgusting and dangerous compounds has only served to increase the demand for the wholesome stimulant, tonic and alterative which for twenty-five years triumphed over all opposition and is now the most popular medicine in the Western hemisphere.

Astral Oil.

PRATT'S ASTRAL OIL.

WHAT IS IT? Astral Oil is a derivative of petroleum, produced by a new and improved process of manufacture, which gives it all the good, without any of the objectionable qualities of ordinary refined kerosene. Explosion is guarded against, and families can burn ASTRAL OIL, with THE SAME ASSURANCE OF SAFETY AS THEY CAN GAS.

ITS QUALITIES.—It is perfectly pure, containing no mixture or chemicals. It gives a clear, uniform and beautiful light, unequalled even by gas. It is free from objectionable odors. It burns in the ordinary kerosene lamps. It is always uniform in quality.

ITS SAFETY.—The Astral Oil may be relied upon as non-explosive and in every way perfectly safe to use. If, while burning, a lamp be upset and broken, the contents will not explode or take fire. It is the safest oil that can be made. Persons once using it will have no other. For sale by Grocers generally. d23

CRANSTON SAVINGS BANK.

Partial Resumption of Payment.

[Special Dispatch to the News by Western Union Line.]

PROVIDENCE, March 10.—Today the Cranston Savings Bank is paying to its depositors 25 cents on a dollar. At an early hour this morning men, women and children, mostly mill hands, gathered in front of the above institution and a steady stream of depositors has been moving to and fro all the morning. Police are on guard for fear of any disturbance. Everything is passing off in a quiet and satisfactory manner. Exchange street from Westminister to Exchange place is literally packed.

FROM WASHINGTON.

From Cuba.

NEW YORK, March 9.—It is reported from Havana that several plantations have been burned near Remedios and various insurgent bands are operating in that jurisdiction; also that 500 men have crossed the Trocha and the dispositions of General Portillo have been ineffectual to arrest the forward march of the insurgents into the villas.

Statistics show for the past year a decided increase of sugar and a slight decline of the molasses production on the island. The United States takes 67 per cent of the sugar and 93 per cent of the molasses.

Mr. Dawes Interviewed.—His Opinion of Moiety.

In an interview with a newspaper reporter, Mr. Dawes says the present moiety system is not creditable to the government, and that he had never done anything which should lead any one to think he would support such arrangements as the Sanborn contracts.

A special dispatch states that Jaynes is allowed the privileges of the floor of the House of Representatives.

A Notable Meeting at Harry Hills.

There was a large gathering at Harry Hill's, tonight. Over five hundred persons crammed into the place and hundreds outside. Hill presided and speeches were made by M. McMullen and Mrs. Lawrence. The latter read letters which had been sent to many prominent persons in this city and the United States, including Mrs. President Grant, Henry Ward Beecher, William B. Astor, A. T. Stewart, James Gordon Bennett, George Jones, Rev. Dr. Morgan, the trustees of Trinity Church, proprietors of the various hotels, Senators Chandler, Carpenter and Sprague, written in a free and easy way, to aid the cause. The proceedings terminated with prayer and singing.

The Dead Ex-President.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—The following has been issued:—

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 9, 1874.

It is with deep regret that the President announces to the people of the United States the death of Millard Fillmore, one of his honored predecessors, who died at Buffalo, New York, last evening. The long continued public services and eminent purity of character of the deceased ex president will be remembered beyond the days of mourning in which a nation will be thrown by the event which is thus announced. As a mark of respect to his memory it is ordered that the executive mansion and the several departments at Washington be draped in mourning until the close of the day on which the funeral shall take place and that business be suspended on the day of the funeral. It is furthermore ordered that the War and Navy departments cause substantial military and naval honors to be paid on the occasion to the memory of the eminent citizen, whose life is now closed.

U. S. GRANT.

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

Adjournment of the Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court, after announcing several opinions, adjourned out of respect to the memory of the late ex-President Fillmore.

This resolution was adopted and the following appointed as such committee: Chairman the Rev. Dr. Prime, Drs. Hall, Steele, Hepworth, Foss, Deems, Sabin, Ganse, Halse, Moore and the Rev. M. The Temperance War in Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 9.—A meeting of the ministers of Providence and vicinity was held this afternoon at the Central Baptist Church, for the discussion of the temperance movement. The Rev. Dr. Taylor presided. It was voted to exclude the public, from which it is inferred that the clergy are not so united in their opinions as is desirable for effective action. The meeting lasted for three hours. The general expression was that they were not called upon to indorse any particular means, but that they recognized in the movement a call from God for renewed activity on the part of all Christian men and women. It was voted that the churches be requested to send the pastor and two delegates to a general conference, and a committee was appointed to propose some plan for work. A meeting of Christian women is to be held tomorrow. There are 256 licensed liquor saloons in the city.

THE LIQUOR COMMISSION.

The following is the text of the liquor commission bill passed by the Senate:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commission of five persons, neither of whom shall be a holder of any office or profit or trust in the General or state government. The said Commission shall be selected solely with reference to personal fitness and capacity for an honest, impartial and thorough investigation, and shall hold office until their duties shall be accomplished, but not to exceed one year. It shall be their duty to investigate the alcoholic and fermented liquor traffic and manufacture, having special reference to revenue and taxation; in distinguishing as far as possible in the conclusion they arrived at between the effect produced by the use of distilled or spirituous as distinguished from the use of fermented or malt liquors in their economic, criminal, moral and scientific aspects in connection with pauperism, crime, vice, the public health and general welfare of the people; also to inquire and take testimony as to the practical results of license and restrictive legislation for the prevention of intemperance in the several states, and the effect produced by such legislation upon the consumption of distilled or spirituous liquors, and of fermented or malt liquors, and also ascertain whether the evil of drunkenness has been increased or decreased thereby; whether the use of opium as a stimulant and substitute for alcholic drink has become more general in consequence of such legislation, and whether the public morals have been improved thereby. It shall also be the duty of said commission to gather information and take testimony as to whether the evil of drunkenness exists to the same extent, or more so, in other civilized countries, and whether those nations that are considered the most temperate in the use of stimulants are so through prohibitory laws; also, to what degree prohibitory legislation has affected the consumption and manufacture of malt and spirituous liquors in this country. Section 2, that the commissioners, all of whom shall not be advocates of prohibitory legislation or total abstinence in relation to alcholic or fermented liquors, shall serve without salary, and shall have authority to employ a secretary at a reasonable compensation, not to exceed $2000 per annum, which, with the necessary expenses incidental to such investigation, not exceeding $10,000, for both the secretary and commissioners, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and for this purpose the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated. It shall be the further duty of said commissioners to report the result of their investigation and the expenses attending the same, to the President, to be by him transmitted to Congress.

NEW YORK ITEMS.

There was a brutal murder in Brooklyn Sunday evening. Thomas Lowndes, a blacksmith, residing in North Fifth street, while intoxicated, quarrelled with his wife. During the altercation he drew a long sheath-knife and stabbed her over the left breast killing her almost instantly. He was arrested.

Application was made Saturday for the discharge of Supervisor Hawley of Brooklyn, one of the parties indicted for revenue frauds, on his own recognizance. An affidavit was read from Hawley, in which he protests he never conspired with Sanborn, and that in what he did he acted under instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury. The application was opposed by District Attorney Tenney, and Judge Benedict reserved his decision.

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

Telegraphic despatches relating to the investigation, at Washington, of the abuses of the revenue detective system, indicate an almost certain result in favor of the merchants' requests, and of the repeal or modification of the obnoxious laws. The main feature of interest of Saturday's session of the investigation was the argument against the system by Mr. Schultz of the New York chamber of commerce.

Forney's Chronicle, which is an earnest advocate of the centennial, in summing up the defeat in the Senate, says: "There is no use in wasting any more time with Congress. Let General Hawley and the men associated with him revive the original plan, organize syndicates all over the country, allow a commission of five per cent. where amounts are small, start ladies in every city, town and village, advertise with large posters everywhere, get up stock in shares of ten dollars, beautifully and appropriately engraved, so that every cabin in the land will have one, at least, framed and hanging on its walls, and best of all, assure the people that the money will be honestly spent, and that the municipal ring of Philadelphia can never touch it, and, our word for it, the exhibition, either national or international, will be a great success."

PATENT PARABOLA SPECTACLES.

Constructed in accordance with the Philosophy of Nature.

ADMIRABLY ADAPTED TO THE ORGANS OF SIGHT, AND AFFORDING ALTOGETHER THE BEST ARTIFICIAL

Help to the Human Vision.

The Parabola Glasses can be used for the greatest length of time, either by day or night, with perfect ease, (when selected to suit the state of the eye,) and never cause that giddiness of the head, or unpleasant sensation to the eyes that many experience from using the common kind, but tend to strengthen and improve the sight.

[From the Rev. Thomas Potter, Norwich Conn.]

Having used a pair of the Parabola Spectacles, I am fully persuaded of their superiority over every other kind, and am confident that the best recommendations are impartial trials. THOMAS POTTER.

[From the Hon. Isaac Hill, late Governor of New Hampshire.]

I have used the Parabola Spectacles for the last three years; and with eyes prematurely injured by severe catarrh for more than forty years, I find them unsurpassed, especially in night reading. ISAAC HILL.

[From M. G. Kerr, M. D., Norristown, Pa.]

I do most willingly bear my testimony in favor of the superiority of the Patent Parabola over all other kinds of Spectacles. They are constructed upon the best established and understood principles of Optics, and their adaptation to the human Eye in its different conditions of vision is so perfect as to render sight easy without effort. In my opinion, none others should be used, since the Eyes once used to these do not seem to grow old, and by having a focus at any point of the surface they appear to restore the eyes to their youthful energy. M. G. KERR, M. D.

[From Isaac Heister, M. D., Reading, Pa.]

I have for several years worn the Patent Parabola Spectacles, and have found them decidedly superior to the Spectacle glasses heretofore in use.

ISAAC HEISTER, M. D.

☞ Should the focus of these Glasses, after making trial of them, be found not adapted to the sight, purchasers are particularly requested to have them changed until suited.

TUESDAY, MARCH, 10, 1874.

"Your wife is dying," whispered Eunice. "She has suffered terribly. Be to her all you can in her few remaining moments." And in an instant Eunice disappeared.

Tenderly I raised Anita in my arms and kissed her brow. She opened her eyes and gazed into mine with a look at once glad and imploring.

"Herbert," she whispered, "I was infatuated on that awful night, but I repented before I had got outside the grounds. I cursed my tempter as if I were mad. I hurried back to secure my note before you should see it, but I arrived only in time to see you fall. Then I ran away—I know not where—but I never dared to come back to you. I was swept overboad at sea once, and before I was rescued I was smitten by a terrible cold from which I never recovered. When I found I must die I dragged myself here, disguised in male attire, to look at you once more. Your noble wife recognized me, and I told her my story. I couldn't help it—it seemed like confessing to a pure angel. She declared she would tell you: that I should have my lawful husband, and she would leave you forever. I only prevented her by vowing to kill myself if she did. Then she declared these rooms were mine; that I should live in them; she forced me to come; I did not want to. She has fed me; she has comforted me; she has been doctor and priest to me. She—oh, God!"

Anita stopped suddenly and struggled for breath. I gently brushed her heavy black hair back from her temples. Again she spoke:

"Herbert, hear my last words; they are true as I hope for mercy. No lips but yours ever touched mine—no arms but yours were ever around me. For a few hours my heart forgot you, and for each hour I have paid a year of suffering. Was it enough?"

Her great dark eyes struggled against their fate as they looked for my coming answer; her pale thin lips, once so rich and red, now twitched nervously. For an instant I pressed her tenderly to my heart, and when again I looked at her her eyelids were drooping over the eyes in which death's dimness could not hide the love there was there, while her lips were breaking into the smile which never again left them. A moment later Anita Lozatos stood at the bar of the Judge who knew of her atonement as well as her sin.

I went in search of Eunice and found her sobbing on her bed. I kissed her and whispered.

"She is dead, darling."

"So is my secret—my terrible secret," sobbed Eunice.

With my own hands I dug her grave in a maze in the garden, where she used to spend many of her moments. Eunice, self-forgetful, saintly Eunice, robed the poor clay in the dress it had worn on her wedding day, and together we laid her in her last earthly home. None but Eunice, Anita, and myself knew the key to the maze, so that one evening when I stole in to look at the ground where so much sorrow had found rest, and found the grave covered with forget-me-nots, I knew that Anita had taken with her all misery that had been poisoning Eunice's life.

AFTER AN EXTENSIVE PRACTICE of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms, with despatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity of a journey to Washington to procure a Patent, and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."

CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office." EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents.

"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part, leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases, and at very reasonable charges." JOHN TAGGART.
